Let Housing Adjust Itself to the Pocketbook

For 10 years the development of housing in this country has been aground on this rock: it has not been possible to build houses cheap enough for the ordinary man to be able to afford them. This mass market of houses for the average workman with an income of, say, $1000-$1500 a year, simply has not been touched. Such building as has been achieved in the home field has been generally in the $5000-and-up class. And that market is strictly limited.

Now since it has proved impossible, due to the $1300-a-year workman, why bring the cost of a house down to the range to let him finish it himself, or not build as much house as is within his range, and let him finish it himself, or finish it over a period of years as he is able? The usual estimate is that a man's house should cost him not above two years' salary.

Very well. Why not build for that $1300-a-year man as much house as can be bought for $2600 and let him buy it at that figure? He has a debt on which he can see some reasonable hope of paying out. He has enough house to keep out the rain. And he can always improve, finish, add to the house as opportunity offers.

That is a very practical approach to the housing problem. Many a city worker would be glad to move into a very rudimentary house in the country where his children could be outside and where he could raise some fruits, vegetables, and poultry for himself or for pocket-money.

He doesn't demand tiled baths, controlled air-conditioning, built-in laundry tubs, and double windows. For the sake of getting his own home, he is willing to "rough it" for a while, gradually finishing, enlarging, and improving his place.

Nearly 50 houses have been built on a plan like this near Hammond, Ind.
Neat and attractive on the outside, built with all-union labor as far as they go, these houses have provided a long-sought opportunity for many plain people to whom the vision of a $3000 house was a mere mirage. Each house was for sale at any stage of its construction at which the buyer felt he could finish it himself, the cost proportionate. Union building trade workers, though such houses did not provide them with as much work as complete houses, realized that it was work that they would otherwise not get at all.

The practical side of this plan is shown by one man who after a year decided to trade his house in on a larger one. He got $300 more for the house than he had paid, the difference representing improvements he had made himself.

This plan deserves study in every community. If the worker's pocketbook does not match the cost of housing, the cost of housing must match the worker's pocketbook.

Students Dislike Buttermilk, Beer; Leeks, Abalone, Okra Mystify Them

The old proverb that you can lead a horse to water but you cannot make it drink applies equally well to human beings and the foods they eat.

When relief workers tried to prepare baskets of food for Chicago families, they found the diet has to be suited to the appetites and customs of the persons concerned. There is no use sending large quantities of herring to negroes because they will not eat the fish. The Jewish population will not eat salt pork. The American population is not strong for macaroni and spaghetti.

The problem of building better nutritional habits cannot be solved merely by telling people what is best for them. Psychologists and nutrition experts in Western Reserve University at Cleveland made a study of 693 students in three universities to find out which foods they disliked and which ones they liked, and why.

The students were instructed to disregard the matter of cooking, but to check the foods purely as to what they were. It turned out that the most disliked foods were the organs of the animal body like brain, lung, and stomach. Next came alcoholic beverages, then shell fish and strong juice vegetables. The 10 most disliked foods in order were buttermilk, brains, beer, gin whiskey, beef liver, calf's liver, oleomargarine and persimmons. Omitting alcoholic beverages and the organs of animals, the 10 most disliked foods were buttermilk, oleomargarine, persimmons, eggplant, caviar, herring, oysters, turnips rutabagas and clams.

Interesting also was the unfamiliarity of the college students with many sub-of foods than were men, but more men were familiar with beef liver, brandy, gin and whisky than were women.

Students of Western Reserve and students of the University of California. The Western Reserve students were particularly opposed to hominy, shell fish, sole, acocodo, artichokes, and Italian squash. Broccoli was the only food more unfamiliar to California students than to those of the other universities.

It was interesting to find out why some of the students disliked certain food. Some refused to eat rabbit or duck because of sentimental reasons. One woman student disliked avocado because it reminded her of cold cream. Another student had an aversion to to modern warfare." Just why is indicated by this excerpt which shows the real battle will take place behind the lines:

Blows behind the lines will be dealt by aviation, mostly through powerful demolition bombs, smaller incendiary projectiles, and particularly through chemical weapons. French Scientist Langevin estimated it is sufficient to drop 100 tons of poison substances on Paris in order to envelop it within an hour by a chemical cloud capable of suffocating to death all the millions of men, women and children of that great metropolis. To carry this quantity of bombs only 100 heavy or 250 light aircraft are needed.

most likely to be despatched to the deepest rear because their application at the front holds the hazard of reverse action against the perpetrators. Not only parachuting expeditionary forces, but also large detachments of infantrymen brought by the capacious modern air transports are likely to descend on the deep rear's railroads, warehouses and industrial centers.

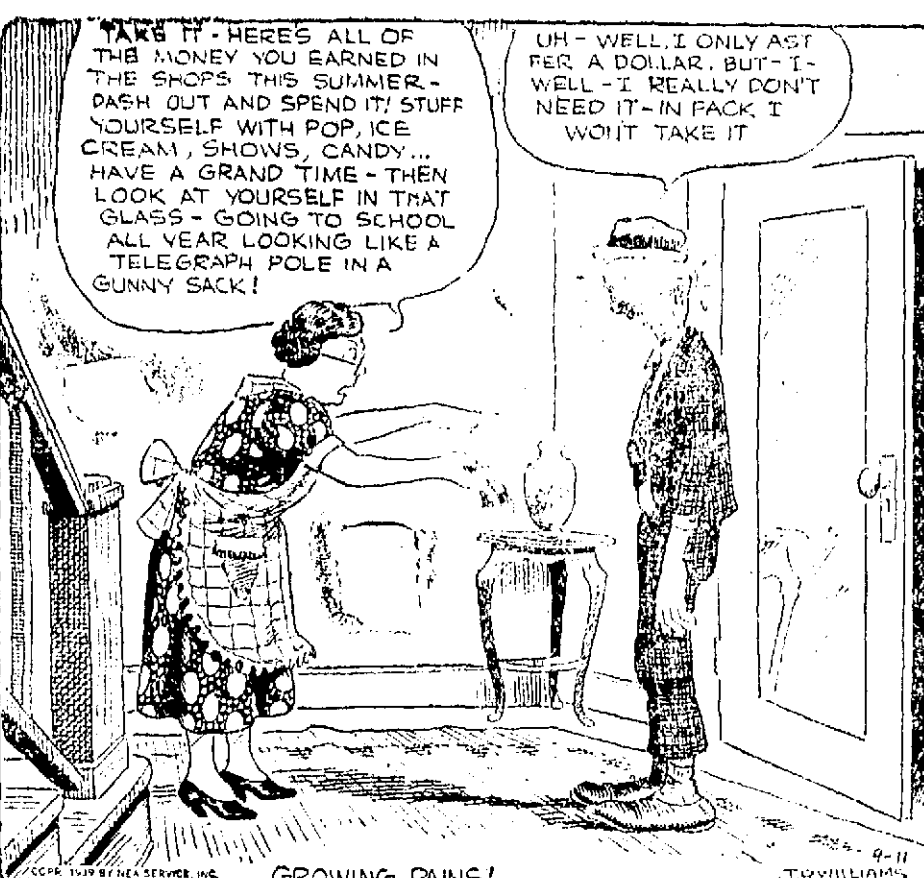

Not the least significant among the media aimed at the rear will be the moral pressure. German General Metzsch writes: "Five hundred thousand leaflets scattered over a wavefront country may prove more efficacious than hundreds of thousands of demolition bombs." Equally mighty is the method of persuasion by radio.

Going to School

Barefoot boy and little girl. She with rosy cheeks and curls. He, a forelock brown with tan. Sturdy little farmer-man. Happy little pair are they. Clinging lightly on the way. In the morning fresh and cool. Going to the district school. Mornings of these morning hours. Songs of birds and scent of flowers. Bleat of lambs and song of rill. Will come sweetly over you still. And you'll straighten up yearning back. O'er that simple childhood track. When the longest road you knew Was the one that led you to School-house just a mile away. Where the birch and rule held sway.

Secretary Stephen T. Early said in answer to all special session inquiries from members of congress that there were no immediate plans.

P. T. A. Groups Look to Successful Year

Renewed Activity Begins With Opening of Public Schools

With the opening of Hope's public schools and the renewed activity of the Parent-Teacher associations, the officers are looking forward to a most successful year, according to Mrs. E. A. Morsani, president of high school P. T. A.

The purpose of a Parent-Teacher association is "The promotion of the education and welfare of children and youth."

Forty-two years ago the Parent-Teachers association was first organized. The ideals and purpose expressed by the founders then, are aims of the organization today. Parent-Teacher associations are promoting a program of education that will coordinate home, school, and community activities for the development of the child.

A Parent-Teacher association is democratic in membership and in form of organization. Every adult who is interested in the objects for which the association is organized, is eligible for membership.

This is an opportunity for all to work together in an organized effort for the education and welfare of all children and youth, recognizing no dividing lines in creed, nationality, financial rating, social position, educational background, or specific interests.

The objects of the Parent-Teacher associations are: To promote the welfare of children and youth in home, school, church, and community. To raise the standards of home life. To secure adequate laws for the care and protection of children and youth. To bring into closer relation the home and the school that parents and teachers may cooperate intelligently in the training of the child.

To develop between educators and the general public such united efforts as will secure for every child the highest advantages in physical, mental, social, and spiritual education.

erel snipping. The detachment withdrew to the city's outskirts to await the main German forces.

The western front communique confirmed previous reports that an undisclosed number of French planes encountered German aerial fighters.

Three French planes were said to have been shot down. A French vanguard suffered heavy losses in skirmishes on the western front, it was reported.

Apparently the tactics employed so successfully in other parts of Poland are expected by the Germans to prove effective at Warsaw also. There they are forming a vise and at the same time endeavoring to cut the enemy off from possible retreat to the east or southeast.

It was apparent from the communique that the air force again was playing an important part in Poland by bombing roads, destroying sections of railroads and blowing to bits such ground organization and plants as the Polish air force still had in the Lomza section.

To Avoid Big War
Disclosure of active fighting between French and Germans gave answer to an anxious question which has been on many German lips these days: "Do the Western powers really mean business or may we yet hope that with Poland defeated they would deem it the better part of wisdom to come to a bloodless arrangement with Germany?"

That hope seemed doomed to disappointment. A diplomatic offensive of prime dimensions has been on foot to win the

Canada Declares War on Germany

All of the Dominions Have Joined Great Britain in War

OTTAWA, Canada (Canadian Press)—Canada formally declared war on Germany Sunday following Britain into the conflict by one week. It was the first time in history that Canada, on its own account and by its own will, had exercised this prerogative of nationhood by declaring a state of war. The government merely published the British war proclamation in 1914.

Thirteen hours after the House of Commons approved the government's proposal to throw Canadian men and resources into war for the second time in 25 years, Lord Tweedsmuir, governor general, issued a royal proclamation. On the authority of King George VI, it announced that a state of war exists with Germany as of and from today.

The declaration was cabled to London for King George's signature, in his capacity as the King of Canada.

At 1:30 p. m. the office of Prime Minister MacKenzie sent a copy of a special edition of the Canadian official Gazette containing the declaration to the Canadian press.

Three other dominions—New Zealand, Australia and the Union of South Africa—preceded Canada in war declarations. India was considered automatically to be at war with Germany upon England's declaration.

It is reasonable to assume that around many of the other suns of the universe there are planetary systems similar to our own, and that many of these planets are inhabited by beings like ourselves.

French away from England.

Premier Mussolini of Italy was said to be Germany's "honest broker" and in frequent touch with French Premier Dauidier. The rumor continued that Franz von Papen, German ambassador to Turkey, was negotiating directly with Paris to keep France out of the war, even though a state of war already exists and the first shots have been fired.

Hollywood Celebrities Illustrate Cigarette Theme

Leading motion picture stars, including Ann Sheridan, Gary Cooper and Fred Astaire, are featured personalities in the new Chesterfield Cigarettes newspaper advertising released from coast to coast this week by Liggett and Myers Tobacco Company.

These stars, together with celebrities in other fields, are used to illustrate "right combinations for more pleasure"—the exclusive Chesterfield blend of various tobaccos for mildness, aroma and finer flavor. The "right combination" theme is also carried out in Chesterfield's point-of-sale displays and in magazine and billboard advertising for this period.

Supporting its newspaper campaign, Chesterfield is broadcasting Fred Waring's Pennsylvania nationally over the National Broadcasting Company stations each evening from Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., E. Cincinnati Drops Half Game As Cards Win Doubleheader

CHICAGO—(P)—Paul Derringer, entering the charmed 20-victory circle, braced the retrogressing Cincinnati Reds Sunday by minimizing seven Chicago Cubs hits for a 2 to 2 victory before 32,761 fans.

Despite the triumph, however, the Reds lost a half game to the challenging St. Louis Cardinals, who narrowed the gap between the clubs to three games by winning a double header at Pittsburgh.

Derringer was never in danger after his mates got to Larry French for four runs on five hits in the third inning. Derringer himself singled to start the winning inning. Bruce Catton Says:

Poland's Isolation Gives Allies Big Strategic Problem

By BRUCE CATTON
NEA Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — Great Britain and France face a strategic problem of tremendous difficulty, in the opinion of army experts here.

Going to the aid of Poland, they are up against a situation in which it is almost impossible for them to supply that help swiftly or effectively. For the simple and inescapable fact is that Poland is tucked away where the French can't get at it.

The biggest factor, as the army men here see it, is Hitler's non-aggression treaty with Russia. That isolates Poland, makes Hitler's eastern front safe, and tremendously increases the difficulty of applying a blockade.

Yet a blockade, in the end, offers the best way—almost the only way—in which the British and French can hope to beat Hitler, it is believed.

Meanwhile Poland and Rumania are negotiating for reinforcement of the Polish-Rumanian treaty of mutual assistance upon which Poland counts.

shins. After Ernie Lombardi had been intentionally passed, Godman scored the fourth run of the frame as right fielder Bill Nicholson lost Harry Craft's short fly in the sun.

The defeat, his seventh of the year against twelve victories, ended a five-game winning streak for French.

mate.

What the rival powers plan to do with their air fleets is, of course, unknown here. American army men doubt that bombing of civilian centers will continue—if for no other reason, they say, simply because wars aren't won that way.

It is suggested that French and British bombing fleets may make the Essen munitions works and the Skoda works in Prague their chief objectives. If they can destroy those plants Germany will be seriously crippled.

Apart from those, it is believed that railway centers will be leading objectives for both sides. Early reports from Poland indicate to army observers here that a prime aim of the German air force has been to cripple Polish train service.

Will Hitler Try to Call Halt?

It is not believed that the German army will have much difficulty in forcing its way to the Vistula river, as that is the first strong defensive position met in an advance into Poland from the west. The supposition is that when, as, and if that objective is reached, Hitler will call a halt and will suggest a peace conference.

If Britain and France reject any such overtures and continue the war, it is believed that the blockade will have to be their main reliance. Although this blockade will be leaky because of Russia's defection, it is still felt that in the long run it will be effective.

Despite the fact that she can expect some imports from Russia and

Chattanooga Wins Southern Pennant

Lookouts Take Double Victory From New Orleans

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn.—(P)—The Chattanooga Lookouts won the Southern Association pennant Sunday by taking both ends of a doubleheader from New Orleans, scores 6 to 2 and 4 to 2.

With a shotgun held at his head by President Joe Engel in a pre-game celebration, Manager Ki Ki Cuyler stood at the plate before 10,824 cheering fans and signed a contract to pilot the Lookouts in 1940. "Down in this country when a president signs a contract he meant it," said the joshing Engel as Cuyler knelt to affix his signature.

It was "Cuyler Day" in the Lookout park and Engel presented the pilot numerous gifts on behalf of the fans. Speaking over the public address system, Cuyler said after expressing his appreciation "I have run out of words—all I want to do is just win a pennant." The Lookouts then proceeded to do just that.

southeastern Europe Germany's position is considered extremely bad in regard to foodstuffs and other raw materials. The fact that food-ration cards were resorted to before hostilities had even begun is taken as a sign of a highly shaky position. In the end, it is felt, a blockade will win.

But that "end" might be a long way off. Before it is reached, Europe may settle down into a condition that is neither war nor peace—a cold, relatively bloodless economic struggle in which the military struggle is a stalemate and in which each side matches its resources against the other on the economic front.

I JUST DON'T KNOW WHAT TO DO, HELEN. SOMETIMES I THINK HE LIKES ME, THEN FOR NO REASON HE FORGETS ME.

THERE IS A REASON, MEN DON'T LIKE WOMEN WHO HAVEN'T PEP AND ENERGY.

Helen is right. Men don't like women who are dull and listless, who look as tired and worn out as they say they are.

Sometimes the lack of sparkling pep and energy, which is an attractive to others, is due to simple anemia, a condition brought on by a deficiency of iron in the blood. Men and women who are overworked, spend long hours indoors and lack sufficient sunshine and exercise, often find that it is this condition which is sapping their pep and energy.

Sargol, the famous tonic with iron, is helpful in overcoming iron deficiency in the blood, tending to aid nature in building red blood cells and hemoglobin. This accomplished, you feel like a new person, with new pep and vitality and a better appetite.

WORKING WIVES BY LOUISE HOLMES

Yesterday, Marian recalls her happiness in meeting Dan, the brief courtship, sudden marriage. She also recalls visiting Bill and Amy Sands. Her own marriage might have been different if she had not gone to the Sands' home.

CHAPTER VI

AMY ELLEN had been one of the stenographers in Grant Yellow's office. A little more than a year earlier she had given up her job to marry Bill Sands. They lived in a cheap little apartment on the West Side.

Going to see them on that Sunday afternoon had put fear into Marian's heart, the fear that was to drive gladness out. The dark little flat became the symbol of what it meant to face a precarious future, even with the man you loved.

The place was cluttered with baby things, Bill's eyes were worried even when he laughed. Amy Ellen was thin and haggard, her prettiness gone. In the bedroom, pitiful with its cheap attempts at beauty, she cried and told Marian that Bill had lost his job, that she was frightened for the tiny baby who needed so many things, expensive things like orange juice and cod liver oil and special milk.

On the homeward drive, Marian had been thoughtful. At last she had said, "Dan, I think I'd better keep my job for a while—until we get a little saved."

"Not on your life," Dan had burst out. "I'll do the doing at our house. When I look at you I want to know that I bought your pretty dress and your cute shoes, that I buy your food and pay for the roof that covers the two of us."

"I know how you feel, but—look at Bill and Amy Ellen. They can't be happy, they're waiting the years when they should be happy, being frightened. It got to me, Dan. Amy Ellen was so pretty, they were in love like we are."

Dan gravely stopped the car and took her in his arms. "They are still in love, Glad. Bill loves Amy Ellen a thousand times more than he did when everything was rosy. He's got something to fight for. Amy Ellen and the baby, he's the head of a family. He'll come through, take my word for it. If she hangs on and believes in him, he'll come out selling."

BUT Marian hadn't been able to see it, she could see only the poverty and fear. She had said, "Please, Dan, be reasonable. If we both work—if we both earn—"

He broke in. "It sounds all right, but it isn't. There's a fundamental law about marriage. The man provides, the home and the woman keeps it for him. Trying to make things easier and pleasant for his wife, trying to give her lovely things, is the incentive a man must have to succeed. When he's at work he wants to know that his wife is at home, expecting him to make good. Can't you see it, Glad?"

"Yes, but—"

He put his hand over hers. "And babies, Glad—babies don't come to a couple who are both working. There isn't time—the right time—"

She pulled her hand away. "A baby wouldn't have a chance—not on $35 a week. Babies need things—nice little beds and carriages—and things."

"A baby needs her mother, Glad. It's up to her father to provide the bed and things."

Marian said, half laughing, "We're certainly looking ahead, Dan."

"But you want a baby—a little girl?"

"Why a girl? I thought men always wanted sons."

"I don't know—girls are so cunning—I think I should love my little girl best."

The conversation terrified Marian. You fell in love with a man, you promised to marry him. Then, all of a sudden, you were considering other lives. She could not get past the drab picture of Bill and Amy Ellen. She went back to the first point of the argument.

"We're young, Dan. We can wait a year or so. I'll keep my job."

"No."

"Just a year!"

"You're stubborn and horrid."

"How about yourself?"

"You're not the only one getting married. I have a right to say something about it."

"It has to be settled one time or another. In a year you'll be a little more accustomed to having money, you'll find an excuse to work another year. I've seen too many marriages wrecked that way."

"If you really loved me you'd let me do as I want to."

"And if you loved me, you wouldn't measure our life with a dollar sign." Their two voices had become high-pitched and hard.

Marian said, "We're quarreling, Dan."

"Oh, no—"

They clung together, terrified by the first clash of wills. In an agony of love they promised never to disagree again.

BUT they had disagreed. The difference would not stay in the background. It cropped up like an ugly weed, crowding out the ecstasy, forcing itself between them. Neither would give an inch.

At last, one night in early October, they had reached the end.

"There's no justice," Marian had cried angrily after a futile argument. "You are ambitious and so am I. You plan to go on, giving up nothing, getting everything. I'm supposed to do all the sacrificing." She had stopped, miserably unhappy.

"If that's the way you feel about it—"

Marian would never forget how she had flung back her head. "I intend to work for a year at least. If you cure to marry me under those conditions—" It had been her last card, she had held it back, certain that it was the high trump.

Dan had looked at her, his eyes like cold steel. He had done with coaxing and persuasion. "You've made the rules," he had said.

FOLLOWED a few hours of scornful pride, then days of waiting, finally numb anguish. Marian could never remember those days when Dan neither called nor waited for her at the building entrance, without a spasm of pain. The agony had been so real as to carry across the years.

Ten days passed. Marian's flag of independence fell on a Saturday morning and she called Dan. He waited for her at noon. Without a word, she slipped her hand into his and they walked along LaSalle street, unmindful of the hurrying crowds, unaware that another living soul existed. They walked straight to the courthouse.

On the way, Marian said, "You win, Dan. I can't stand it."

He said, "Thank you, dear. Trust me for a little while. I'll make it up to you."

Marian found glory in defeat, pride in Dan's strength of will. After the short ceremony which made her Dan's wife, she had called Grant Fellows. She would not be back to the office any more, she had been married.

They had spent a beautiful week-end at Michigan City, returning to a tiny furnished apartment. There had been an interval of such complete happiness that Marian, sitting in the cheap little car beside a strangely remote Dan, could not remember the time without a quivering ache in her heart.

"Want anything for dinner?" Dan asked as they approached a market. Marian came back to the present with a thud. When before had she allowed herself the uncertain luxury of day dreaming? Memories shattered the defensive wall she had built around herself. She would never look back again—never.
